There Is No Let Up to Fruit Canning

You begin with the fruit in warm weather, and there is no end till the chilly days of fall.

Cherries come with the birds. Berries and plums are ready for the kettle while the sealing wax on the cherry cans are still warm. Peaches and pears, apples, jellies—in fact nearly all the juicy products of summer claim their share of stewing, heating, sugaring and "cellaring."

And all the time it's hot!

And growing hotter?

You need help in this hot summer weather, more than any other time during the year.

A Hoosier Kitchen Cabinet which bring your utensils and work to your finger tips, and shortens these hot tasks, is a blessing.

You ladies who come in early and have your cabinet delivered before you are tired out with this work (without having to worry about the pay), will confer a lasting blessing on your own heads.

Presidential Profanity.

The fifteenth is a notable hole. It produces the fancy swearing of the day. "Oh, fiddle!" remarks the president, with every appearance of sincerity. There's no denying it. There are plenty of witnesses. This shocking outburst is caused by a drive that's a bit topped and looks sure for a standtrap. "It got over!" shouted the caddy. It did, but barely. "Did it?" says the president. "Well, with this wind in your favor, to waste a lot of force like that's enough to make a preacher swear or a banker either." (This being a dig at classmate, who banks for a living.) Under this gibe classmate tops a brassie, the ball falling into a trap. "It's making a great effort to get out," says Bill Taft of Yale. "Evidently not used to such a locality. With that he tops his own brassie, but recovers well with his maulie. Pulling short on his first putt, he observes philosophically, 'I was a coward.' So it takes him a seven to classmate's six. "How goes it, golfers?" in his hall as he overtakes the tardy party. It appears that there is much complaint of Col. Oodoo Bogey. "How far to this green?" asks Judge Warrington. "It's 205 yards," answers classmate. "Well, give me an iron, then," retorts the judge at which excellent jest the president roars like an amiable bull. Straight downhill is the sixteenth hole, and the president is getting a little tired, and the last three holes are not among his best. From the sixteenth tee he drives short and finds his ball in a trap, remarking reproachfully to his caddy: "Look at that! I thought I'd got over. Boy, is that the best you can do for me."

For all that, he makes the green on his second, the long roll carrying it on. But that fatal extra putt gives him a five to bogey four. The missed putt sees the presidential putter raised in vexation. The presidential face is contorted with annoyance. But the presidential lips remain admirably dumb. The sixteen is a tough one. The drive is simple, but in the middle of your second are two pits, and to dodge them you have to hug the "out of bounds" with perilous closeness. There are also two pits, one either side of the green, that simply assassinate crooked or "over" approaches. For all that, the president gets into trouble on it, once and gets away with a six, while classmate, playing sterling golf, gets a bogey five. The home hole finds the president clearly weary. His drive is short, and his second and third—well, disappointing. On his first putt he over-runs the hole, exclaiming: "Oh-h-h-h, pshaw! Now tell me how to get this!" It doesn't, though—only an eight, making the cards for the last nine look like this:

The president. 5-6-6-4-7-8-5-3-3
Mr. Ripley. 7-6-7-5-6-6-5-6-3-3
Total for the 18 holes: The president 108, classmate, 99.

The president enters these figures in his red notebook and goes in to lunch, chortling amiably upon the conquering classmate. All of which indicates that the president's attitude toward his golf score is much like his attitude on the tariff. He desires to revise them both down, but he'll take what he can get and make no fuss about it.—A. E. Thomas in Everybody's Magazine for July.

PRESIDENT TAFT AND GOLF.

How He Plays the Game and Enjoys It. A Round of the Links with the Chief Executive and a Classmate.

The president is a self-made golfer. He never in his life took a lesson, save in the school of experience. Care and conservatism are stamped all over his game. Every shot is a separate study. First he surveys the ground over which the ball must pass, then he inspects the lie, and finally selects the club best adapted to the shot. His feet are next attended to, for, being a public man, he well understands the importance of the stand one takes, whether in addressing a golf ball or an assemblage of one's fellow-citizens. He takes more than the average time in addressing the ball; his back swing is slow and only fairly long; and the impact of his club upon the ball is commonly sure and powerful. His follow-through is good—as far as it goes—and it would probably be longer if the president were thinner. But, you see, if you are built so that your arms have to dodge about two hundred and—well, anyhow, his style is workmanlike, not polished—like his speeches. Yet, bearing in mind the player's age, it exhibits no consistent faults at which the average good golfer could carpiously cavil.

When Mr. Taft first took up golf, his drive was very short—scarcely over 125 yards; but he has now so far improved that he rarely gets off a clean tee shot of less than 175 yards, while his drive occasionally reaches 200. Still, he remains what would generally be called a short driver—short, but straight, for it is seldom indeed that he is called on to play his second from the rough. His approach is the best feature of his game, for with his maulie it's not at all uncommon for him to lay his ball dead to the hole at anywhere from fifty to a hundred yards. As with many another and better golfer, however, putting is the president's bete noire. Now and then he runs down a fifteen or twenty-foot putt, only to miss a two-foot one on the very next green. He puts exactly like a judge—logically, stiffly, rigid from his shoulders to the end of his putter. There's none of the coaxing, cuddling, caressing quality seen in the game of the finest of our putters. No, sir, it's—"Take that from the shoulder, the way I think you ought to get it; and if you don't go in the hole, why, blast you, you can jolly well stay out and be bunkered to you." Putting, in fact, is the only Rooseveltian feature of Mr. Taft's golf.

The president's golf bag contains sev-on or eight clubs—a driver, a brassie, two maulies—a long and a short one—a midiron, a niblick and a putter. He drives with a brassie. This is an uncommon club given to him by Taylor, the English professional—forty-eight inches in length and heavy in proportion. Its shaft has only a medium whip, and its face is only slightly laid back. Having used this brassie as a driver, he uses his driver, when he uses it at all, as a sort of spoon brassie, for good lies in the rough. The maulies are both pretty well laid back and fairly heavy. The putter is one of those patent-aluminum affairs, such as few experts use, with a head shaped much like a miniature rocker. It's the poorest club in the bag and the least effective. Besides these
